Bearing Witness to the 1937 Haitian Massacre:
How an archival letter, an activist’s death, and the internet sparked a social movement

Wednesday
February 17, 2016
12:00 p.m to 1:30 p.m
1291 SS&H

Edward Paulino is an assistant professor in the Department of Global History at John Jay College/CUNY. A Latin Americanist and Caribbeanist by training his forthcoming book “Dividing Hispaniola: the Dominican Republic’s Border Campaign against Haiti, 1930-1961,” traces the origin and relationship of the Dominican state with Haiti through its porous border region and its local citizens, including anti-Haitian policies such as the 1937 genocidal massacre.

Come and listen to his lecture in which he examines the 1937 Haitian Massacre and how this research led to a wider dialogue in how Dominicans and its diaspora remember and respond to the memory of this little known 20th century genocide in the Americas.